FIFA World Cup Screensaver is a virtual collection of the history of the world's greatest football event. This sports screensaver displays the images of previous competitions. Up until 2000, it was held once every four years. An average sports fan will love to see the events and the choice, and even those who don't like football can appreciate all that was taken part in. The interface is quite basic, because it displays previous years. It is necessary to click on the left edge of the screensaver's bar to display the current year. The years are highlighted and the images are swapped when the year reaches the end of the image. The FIFA World Cup is a very important football event that brings together the world's best teams in a much-anticipated competition. There are 2 qualifications, 2 Intercontinental leagues and 7 regional competitions. The World Cup itself consists of the final, which is held in a certain country, and the next four matches that are played in venues around the country. The final used to be held at the neutral venue, until a friendly agreement was reached. All the national teams participate in the competition, and the host nation takes part. Every four years, the World Cup is held, and in the course of the tournaments, the best teams in the world are being crowned. The European teams dominate the upper part of the field, while the USA take a part of the regional competitions. As a result of this coordination, the network node performing scheduling can predict and reduce the likelihood of undesired delays in transmitting packets to other nodes in the network. For example, in some networks, a number of nodes can be configured to transmit and receive packets to each other at the same rate, and these nodes coordinate the scheduling of their transmissions based on the knowledge of the rate at which their packets are to be transmitted to each other. A challenge for a fixed network such as a mesh network, or a wireless network that includes nodes with variable rates, is how to assign schedule information to network nodes so that transmissions to nodes with variable
